(2) With acceptance of the article(s) for publication by the publisher, the author transfers to the publisher the rights of use for the duration of the statutory copyright period, above all the right of duplication and dissemination in printed form for particular issues, the right of duplication and dissemination on machine readable data media, especially diskettes and CD-ROMs (data media output), and the right to store the article(s) electronically, especially in internal and external databases, and make it/them available to the public for individual call, reproduction on a monitor and printing by the user (online-use in the push and pull system too), also in advance and in excerpts. In particular the publisher has the sole right of having pdfs of the journal or individual articles created and disseminated. The publisher can also transfer this right to third parties.

Furthermore, the author also grants the publisher the exclusive rights - without restrictions in time, content or place – for types of use unknown at the time of entering into the contract. The granting of rights also extends to exploitation of the rights of use both in the publisher’s own company and by gratis or non-gratis granting of (partial) rights to third parties.

(3) Within the context of Section (2) the author affirms that s/he is free to dispose of the rights of disposal and the rights of use granted to the publisher with regard to any external text and or images procured too, i.e. that these are free of rights of third parties.

4) Free publication of articles (print or online) that are less than three years old is prohibited. Reference is made to the website www.gjae-online.de at which the article can be studied at any time for a fee. Authors can publish their articles that are more than three years old on their websites free of charge.
